Body found near local synagogue

DEATH Homicide detectives are investigating after a man's body was discovered outside a west-end synagogue Thursday morning.

The body was found lying in the alley around 8:45 a.m. behind the Beth Israel Synagogue (131 Wolf Willow Rd.), parallel to a wooded ravine.

Police are investigating the incident as a suspicious death.

"It is too early in the investigation to determine the circumstances surrounding the death," EPS homicide Staff Sgt. Lorne Pubantz said.

Anyone who may have seen suspicious activity is asked to call police.

Calgary cops under probe

DARREN KRAUSE
Metro Canada

SHOOTING Two Calgary police officers are under independent investigation after a shooting Wednesday night in a northeast Calgary commercial parking lot said to be a source of criminal activity complaints.

The two officers, one having served a year and the other four years, opened fire on a black Nissan SUV in a parking lot around 7:45 p.m. Wednesday, according to police.

Clifton Purvis of the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team (ASIRT), the organization handling the independent review of the case, provided very few details because of the ongoing investigation, but said the officers had initially conducted a traffic stop on the vehicle when the situation escalated.

"Our task is to determine whether the actions of the Calgary Police Service members involved were justified," said Purvis.

Calgary police Chief Rick Hanson was also mum on details, cautious not to undermine the ASIRT investigation, though he said the area the incident took place has been on police radar because of past complaints.

Hanson said the officers involved would be off for a mandatory 30 days while the investigation runs its course, but defended their actions.

Feds OK on flu: Poll

Handling of H1N1 fine, media overreacts, say Canadians

Albertans not so happy with province

• Albertans were highly critical of the province's handling of the pandemic, with 61 per cent of respondents rating the performance as poor, the poll shows. "The most significant (issue), I would say, was there was a controversy over the fact that the Calgary Flames hockey players and their families had been given the vaccine good job dealing with swine flu, while another third or more (33 to 37 per cent) describe their performance as at least fair.

However, about one-third of respondents grad-while others were finding it more difficult to get," said Anderson, noting that the anger was intensified when the province subsequently ran out of vaccine. Opinions about the handling of swine flu were similar across the country and for all three levels of government, he said. "But in Alberta, they're strikingly different."

al, and federal — as poor. "Fundamentally, I can understand why 22 per cent to 24 per cent saying you've done a good job on something isn't really your best day," said Doug Anderson, senior vice-president of Harris-Decima.

"However, the complexity of the task and the fact that nothing like this has really ever been done, to me that says it's more like a passing grade," Anderson said from Ottawa. "But at the same time, I don't see this as collective criticism."

The survey of 1,000 people — considered accurate within 3.1 percentage points, 19 times out of 20 — also found that Canadians aged 18 to 34 are more impressed with governments' performance than those 50 and older.

The poll was conducted Nov. 5 through Nov. 8.

Art Gallery of Alberta's new-look logo

The Art Gallery of Alberta has unveiled the new look, and new experience, that will characterize the gallery well past its opening in January 2010. The new logo is the acronym for the Art Gallery of Alberta, AGA, presented as overlapping letters in vivid tones of orange, red and green. The logo is made up of three identical elements: A trio of lower case "A" characters with one inverted to become a "G." This simple shift creates an original entity that encourages new ways of looking and connecting.

Rodeo stars spread magic

Cowboys, cowgirls entertain special-needs children

GWYNETH DUNSFORD
for Metro Edmonton

The cowboys and cowgirls of the Canadian Finals Rodeo climbed out of their saddles on Thursday to spend time with children with special needs.

During Rodeo Magic, Rexall Place became a carnival ground for the 150 local kids who met rodeo's all-stars.

Even after a tough night's competition, cowboys and cowgirls were ready on focus on their young admirers.

"We come out here to rodeo, and it's all the lights and the money and stuff," said Trevor Knowles, a steer wrestler from Oregon. "But it brings you back to reality when you come to a deal like this to help somebody else out, and (you) realize how lucky you are to do what we (do) and make a living out of it."

seen before," said Sandra Pysklywyk, the manager of public relations at Northlands. "Especially (since) Edmonton is an urban centre, it gives them a chance to get back to their Western roots."

Despite being urban dwellers, some of the children exhibited a natural talent for the rodeo.

"She has done it all before, from the looks of things," said cowboy Mike Solberg of the horseriding skill of his young charge, Breanna Anders.

Urban agriculture stirs ample interest

HEARING Edmontonians may have a tasty future if the city proceeds with urban agriculture plans, an audience at city hall heard Thursday.

During a public hearing, city councillors discussed policies meant to give Edmonton a sustainable, local food economy.

To the rapt attention of council members and the crowd gathered, experts advised on preliminary plans to preserve urban farmland and to institute healthy food policies.

"We have been providing the administration with some options for what urban agriculture would look like in the Edmonton context," said urban planner Robert Barrs.

"We have been doing research about the existing best practices of urban agriculture that other cities have been using."

A resurgent interest in urban agriculture brought many to city council chambers.

"It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that food and water are going to be two of our critical resources," said Debbie Hubbert, a local language pathologist.

Vaccine availability expands as death toll rises

Flu Outbreak

VICTORIA HANDYSIDES

DISEASE H1N1 vaccinations become available to more Albertans Friday.

People with chronic conditions between the ages of 45 and 54 are the latest high-risk group allowed to receive the vaccine.

Additional high-risk groups will be added early next week. Those groups may include the homeless, First Nations, adolescents in group homes, the severely obese and those with neurological disorders.

People who don't fall in high-risk groups will have to wait a few more weeks.

Five more Albertans infected with the virus died near the week's end, though all had underlying health conditions, chief medical officer of health Dr. Andre Corriveau said Thursday.

Of the fatalities across the province, 33 of 34 people had pre-existing medical conditions.

The number of deaths are not uncommon for a regular flu season, Corriveau said, and he urged Albertans not to panic.

"People have had to walk a fine line between hype and underestimating," he said. "But we are talking about a pandemic virus, and there are a lot of people sick in our ICUs."

Queen of the rodeo crowned

Every girl aspires to be the queen of something when they grow up, and yesterday this dream came true for one girl.

Brittney Foster, 21, was crowned the new face of rodeo yesterday at the Westin Hotel, naming her the 2010 Miss Rodeo Canada.

"I have been looking up to this role since I was a little girl," said Foster.

The Peace River native will be ruling the pro rodeo kingdom for the upcoming year attending more than 300 events during her reign.

"Working with the community and being a positive role model is important to me," said Foster.

Foster was crowned Miss Grande Prairie Stampede in 2008 and spends her time working towards her bachelor of education and volunteering in her community.

Queenly duties began immediately for Foster, as she barely had time to wipe the tears from her eyes. "I'm an emotional person," said Foster. "Those tears are big happy tears."

Accused in Mountie's death says shots were accidental

DEATH A man accused of killing an RCMP officer in the Northwest Territories two years ago says the fatal shots were fired as the pair struggled in the dark over a gun.

Emrah Bulatci, who is charged with first-degree murder, told a packed and silent courtroom Thursday that he never meant to kill Const. Chris Worden.

"(Worden) was on top of me," Bulatci said. "He had my head pinned down. He was struggling to get my right arm. He was pulling it back. I was trying to get my hand free and that's when the gun went off. It went off twice — it was like bang-bang."

"He fell and he stopped fighting with me. I pushed him off and I panicked. I just got up and ran."

Bulatci, who is from St. Albert just outside Edmonton, tried to plead guilty to manslaughter at the start of his trial last month. The Crown did not accept that plea and the trial went ahead.

Bulatci testified that he arrived in Hay River on Sept. 29, 2007, with nearly 10 ounces of crack cocaine he wanted to sell to pay off a $17,000 drug debt. He stopped along the way to buy a .45-calibre handgun.

On Oct. 6, Worden was called back after finishing his shift to search for a man who was believed to be suicidal. Reports placed the man at the drug house, so Worden came by about 6 a.m. — just as Bulatci and his friends were shutting down for the night.

Bulatci said he was climbing into a cab with his buddies when he realized he'd left the gun inside. When he returned, Worden was standing there. When Bulatci tried to get in the cab, he told him he was under arrest.

Bulatci, 25, said he ran across the street into a wooded area so he could get far enough away from Worden to ditch the gun. But the young officer kept coming and yelling "Stop resisting!" Bulatci ran back out onto the road and took the gun out.

Worden, 30, kept coming. Bulatci headed back into the trees, but this time stumbled and fell. Worden leaped on top of him and, said Bulatci, was shot as he tried to wrest the gun from the suspect's hand.

Military takes action on suicidal soldiers

Rapid-reaction team of mental health workers created

The military is creating a rapid reaction force of mental health workers to investigate suicidal soldiers and better treat psychological problems in its ranks.

This, plus an overhaul of the way the Canadian Forces keeps track of retired or reserve force soldiers who kill themselves, forms the backbone of a new strategy for combatting suicides that was presented this week to Gen. Walter Natynczyk, the chief of defence staff.

It is the defence department's attempt to bring mental health problems in the force to the forefront and remove the stigma of ten attached to soldiers who seek help for psychological problems related to the traumas of war or because of underlying mental health issues.

It's also a way to more quickly address some of the gaps in the way the military deals with members at risk of taking their own lives.

Just last month, the mother of Pte. Frederic Couture, who lost his foot in December 2006 to a roadside bomb, said she was dumbstruck to find out that her son had tried to kill himself on the battlefield, minutes after suffering his injury, before successfully taking his life on Nov. 14, 2007.

Linda Lagimoniere said she only learned from an official investigation completed long after his death that there were early signs he may have been suicidal.

"When you finally find out what happened, you go, 'My God, why did they never tell me?'" she said.

On Saturday, be aware of a killer disease

HEATHER BUCHAN
For Metro Canada

Saturday is the 18th annual World Diabetes Day.

It's an international day designed to spotlight the disease that hits about 250 million people worldwide. Nov. 14 was chosen in homage to the birth of Canada's Sir Frederick Banting, whose work — along with Dr. Charles Best — led to the discovery of insulin in 1922 at the University of Toronto.

About 41,000 Canadians die each year as a result of diabetes — generally from a stroke or heart disease.

By next year, about three million Canadians will have diabetes, draining $15.6 billion from the health-care system annually.

"Diabetes is the third most frequently diagnosed disease by physicians in Canada," said Dr. Stewart Harris, lead investigator for the National Diabetes Management Strategy. Harris is based in London, Ont.

Several factors cause the high diabetes rate, experts say:

- Canada's aging population.
- Rising obesity rates.
- Increasingly sedentary lifestyles.

Police continue search for bodies in child sex abuse case

Five family members charged in a child sex abuse case in western Missouri made their first court appearance Thursday while crews resumed scouring property where some of the abuse allegedly occurred years ago.

The five men, wearing orange jumpsuits and shackled at their wrists, waists and ankles, appeared downcast as judge John Frerking read the charges against them, including forcible sodomy, rape with a child younger than 12 and use of a child in a sexual performance. The allegations, which include bestiality, forcing children into fake marriages with relatives and making an 11-year-old have an abortion, date from 1988 to 1995.

Authorities resumed a search Thursday at a property where members of the family once lived. They believe they may find a body or bodies and buried glass jars with notes written by children who may have documented sexual abuse.

Three of the five men are lay ministers in the Community of Christ church whose licences have been suspended, church spokeswoman Linda L. Booth said.

Cpl. Bill Lowe of the Missouri State Highway Patrol said a 26-year-old woman came forward to investigators in mid-August with the allegations.

What do you like, dislike about your city?

UrbanCompass

Terence Harding

metroneWS.ca/harding

Dear readers: I assume most of you are reading this on the bus or the LRT on the way to work. Some of you are probably glancing through the pages of Metro as you wait for the elevator to arrive at your floor.

Others may be reading while you wait to pick up your morning latte before you head on to work. And that's all I really know about you except that you live in this city. As a result, I often wonder who you are and what you think of this city in which we live.

I am not a journalist. I am a commentator. I do not hang around city hall waiting to interview councillors or city employees about what they are up to. I leave that to those for whom it is a full-time job.

Instead, I'm an urban explorer. I do a lot of walking and driving around waiting for something to catch my eye. I think I probably look at our city in much the same way as you do and ask myself some of the same questions you might. Some things I like and some things I don't. Some things we do make sense to me, and some things seem beyond reason.

I'll give you an example of something that doesn't make sense to me — the use of paving blocks on many of our sidewalks. True, they look nice, but they're not designed for our climate. Every year the freeze-and-thaw cycle pushes some of these blocks out of where they have been set. This means every year they have to be reset. Unless you are one of the people who make a living reseating the blocks, it makes no sense at all to use them in our climate.

So here's what I'm thinking. I would like to know what you see that you like in our city and what you don't. Maybe you love the new art gallery. Maybe you can't understand why that big crack in your sidewalk hasn't been fixed for more than two decades. I've set up an account at www.flickr.com/groups/edmontonimages/.

By using a Yahoo account, you can upload images of what you love or hate about Edmonton. Every Friday, you find out what I like and don't like about our fair city; it's only fair that you get the same opportunity.

A world where what you see is what you get

Susie Mowers

We know how "the game" works. More importantly, we know that anyone in their late 20s who still plays "the game" is still single — because all the straight-up people who never played games are long gone and happily married. Games don't work. We know this.

We are the 20-something female neo-feminists whose posse consists of jocks and intellectuals who all just so happen to be male. We don't get along with girls because they're catty, analytical ... and each other's worst enemy.

So we befriend guys. We hang with guys. We like their tell-it-like-it-is mantra and, yeah, we try to adopt it and make it our own. And we do. Quite successfully. And it's always spectacular, until "it" happens. And it always happens.

Flashback to last Tuesday. Ben and I are in the boardroom (and it isn't until much later I realize we're alone). But he's my friend and we're talking hockey.

"You want to go to the game?" he asks.

"Sure!" I say.

Mistake No. 1.

Back at my apartment, I check with my roommate that this is not a date. I'm under the impression we're both only going because we're good friends and we like the same team. Mistake No. 2.

The non-date goes superbly and we bid our adieus on the subway. And then this:

"Had a great time. Next time — dinner?"

I curse. It's the ambiguous date invitation. Just when you swore things were cool. Friendly.

Flash forward to Friday when a colleague I consider a dear friend professed his love for me. His motive for confessing? If I was so straightforward, he could learn to be, too.

See, this isn't necessarily what we're after. But it's what happens. It's what always happens. And it makes me wonder: Is too straightforward a downfall?

Women, this is your call to action. (Read: Our plea). Let us off the hook. Quit the games. Tell it like it is. Say what you feel. Don't analyze. He means what he says and he says what he means. Do the same and we would all be better off for it.

Because the more you disclose, the rarer we are. And the better you look. And the less frustrated he is. And the happier you both are. You see a pattern here?

A world where what you see is what you get.

Think of all the friends you could make.

Olympics will lead way out of recession: Report

A new forecast says an Olympics-pumped British Columbia will lead Canada out of recession with the strongest economic growth in the country next year.

Eskies get clean slate

CFL PREVIEW

Edmonton at Calgary

If there's any pressure on the Eskimos heading into the West Division semifinal against Calgary at McMahon Stadium Sunday, Edmonton head coach Richie Hall doesn't appear affected by it.

Decided underdogs after being beaten in three of four regular season meetings by the Stampeders, including lopsided 32-8 and 30-7 losses in Calgary, Hall and the Eskimos are well aware the numbers suggest they don't stack up well on paper.

That said, the 9-9 Eskimos are quietly confident it'll be a different story against the 10-7-1 Stampeders between the chalk lines on hostile turf in Calgary, with a date against the Saskatchewan Roughriders on the line.

"When you line up, the score is 0-0 regardless of what happened during the course of the regular season," Hall said. "They're playing at home. They don't have to travel. They have the crowd. They have this. They have that. There's an expectation you're going to play and perform well in front of your home crowd."

The Eskimos earned their ticket to the semi-final with two lopsided wins to end the season, including a playoff-clinching 45-13 victory over the B.C. Lions in Vancouver.

The Stampeders, meanwhile, are coming off a 30-14 loss to the Roughriders.

"We don't mind being the underdogs," said rookie running back Arkee Whitlock. "They won three games out of four."

Out to erase bad memories

BARRETT HOOPER

It's impossible to look at Michael Bisping and not picture Dan Henderson's right fist turning his smug mug into a cubist painting — the eyes rolling back, the nose flattening, the jaw shifting violently sideways as the lights go out.

It was one of the most brutal knockouts in UFC history, compounded by Henderson's flying forearm across his unconscious opponent's chin "to shut him up," and it would have left an ordinary person eating through a straw for weeks.

So the biggest question that Saturday's UFC 105 will answer is how will this once-cocky British fighter respond when he steps back into the octagon for the first time since being literally turned into a punch-line four months ago?

Bisping will face Denis Kang, a 32-year-old Vancouver native who now calls Montreal home, in a crucial middleweight bout for both fighters.

Bisping, who has a huge fan base thanks to his two appearances on The Ultimate Fighter reality series, first as a fighter and then as a coach, was on track for a title shot until he stepped in front of the Henderson express. So he needs a win both to dispel any lingering doubts about his abilities and to stay in the hunt for champion Anderson Silva.

Likewise, Kang, a former PRIDE FC star with 44 fights under his belt, was unremarkable in his first two UFC bouts and needs to prove he's a legitimate threat in the weight division.

Long's nerdy side

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News

Justin Long is no stranger to being animated — he voices Alvin in the Alvin and the Chipmunks movies, after all — but playing a little green man in Planet 51 was still a new experience for him.

Luckily his character, Lem, the awkward teen who discovers and hides an alien (actually a U.S. astronaut voiced by Dwayne Johnson), was easy for Long to relate to. "I was — shockingly — a bit of a nerd in high school," Long admits. "I was a little socially awkward. I wasn't as smart, though, sadly. Lem is a lot brighter than me."

The biggest surprise for Long was how much work he had to do to manipulate his voice to play Lem in the film, which opens next week.

"We did the movie over the course of several years, during which time I went through puberty, apparently," Long says with a laugh. "My voice coach said that my voice over the last couple of years has gotten deeper. I don't know what happened. But I was playing a teenager, so I pitched up." With 11 film credits in 2009 alone, Long has been busy — and that doesn't count those Mac ads or his occasional pop-ins at Saturday Night Live.

He's been seen in a number of comedies, including He's Just Not That Into You and Funny People, but what really got the young actor some attention this year was his work in Sam Raimi's Drag Me to Hell. But Long's just happy he didn't stink up the screen.

"My biggest fear was just being caught in a dishonest moment. There's nothing worse than bad horror acting," he says.

"I have such a respect for actors who are able to give such convincing horror movie performances. It really is exhausting, because it's your whole body. It is just gruelling. You go home every night so drained emotionally. But in Drag Me to Hell, it was really Alison Lohman. I was just the boyfriend."

And Long says he's looking forward to more animation — he'll be heard soon in Alvin and the Chipmunks: The Squeakquel — because he doesn't have to worry so much about his hands.

Smitten by mama Bullock

FEATURE For Quinton Aaron, the newcomer who stars as NFL rookie star Michael Oher as a teen adopted by a wealthy Memphis family, embodying gentle giant Oher's persona wasn't the hard part. It was working with his on-screen mom, Sandra Bullock.

Of course, it's bound to be difficult working with someone you've had a crush on for years.

"The whole thing was awkward because here's a beautiful woman that I'm attracted to that's playing my mamma," the Bronx native says, laughing. "I had to wrap my head around that before going into the scene." Aaron has been a Sandra Bullock fan for years, he admits. "We're talking from Love Potion No. 9. That was the first movie I saw her in," he says. "That was the first time I got a thing for her."

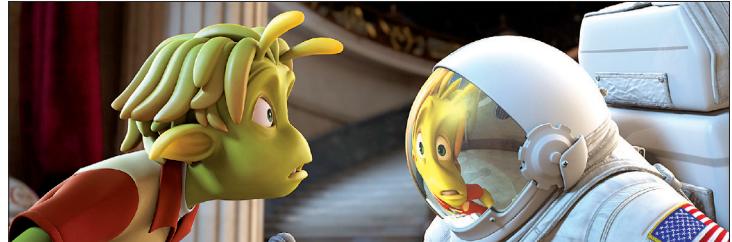

"The whole thing was awkward because here's a beautiful woman that I'm attracted to that's playing my mamma."

Quinton Aaron

"One of my favorite movies with her is Speed. The first one, not the second one," he says, and he was happy to learn he wasn't alone in his dislike of Speed 2. "She said it, too," he remembers. "She didn't really care for the second one. She was like, 'Please don't tell me you liked the second one.'"

While Bullock has a long enough resume to buffer her against flops like Speed 2, The Blind Side — in theatres next Friday — is only Aaron's second film, after Michel Gondry's Be Kind Rewind, during which the young actor received a fortuitous promotion.

"I gesticulate a lot, usually very effeminate," he jokes. "It was a nice freedom to have in the room. I could just kind of wildly use my hands and body and not be afraid of what it looked like."

Metro World News

Complaining about excess in a Roland Emmerich movie seems a bit silly, but if there's one major problem with 2012, his latest end-of-the-world bonanza, it's that it doesn't know when to say when.

There doesn't seem to be a landmark the director could say no to demolishing, be it Vatican City or the Christ the Redeemer statue in Rio de Janeiro. Even the White House, which Emmerich famously exploded in 1996's Independence Day gets wiped out again, this time by having an aircraft carrier smashed into it.

But it's not just destruction that's in excess. Narratively, 2012 is beyond bloated, with far too many characters and plot threads and far too much set up before getting to what people are really there to see.

There are many obvious sections that could've been excised to bring the running time down from its whopping two hours and 40 minutes.

Valuable screen time is wasted on a pair of aging cruise-ship crooners (George Segal and Blu Mankuma) who only seem to be in the movie to add emotional depth to a main character who has plenty already (Chiwetel Ejiofor) and as an excuse to show a cruise ship toppled by a tsunami. To be sure, Emmerich does one thing amazingly well, and that's destroy things in the most elaborate ways possible.

And in that respect, 2012 is definitely an achievement. The extended sequence of John Cusack's escape from a crumbling Los Angeles — first by speeding limousine, then by twin-engine plane — is absolutely mind-blowing, an actual thrill ride.

Emmerich peppers the movie with other gems of our heroes literally outrunning destruction, including great set pieces in Las Vegas and Yellowstone National Park.

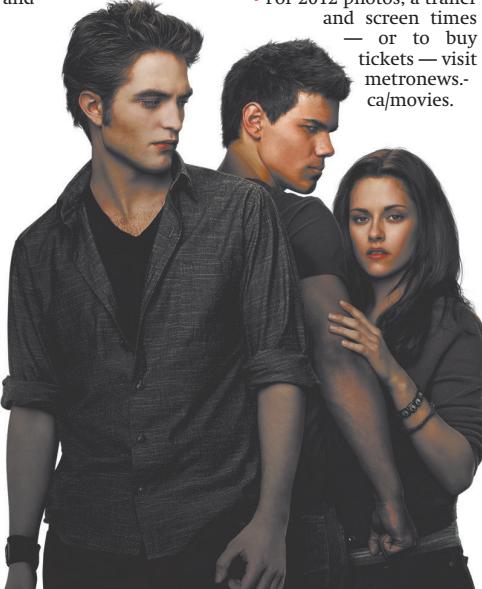

Unfortunately, there's a whole lot of movie to wade through to get to those moments. After a brisk opening covering the time between Ejiofor's scientist's discovery of the coming cataclysm in 2009 and its early arrival in 2012, the film slows down considerably with the introduction of Cusack's down-on-his-luck writer and his glum ex-wife (Amanda Peet).

As the dialogue between science folks and world leaders gets more and more cryptic, the audience is left waiting and waiting for stuff to start falling apart.

Stellar cast keeps Pirate Radio afloat

REVIEW When The Boat That Rocked originally hit British theatres last spring, both reviews and reception were about as cool as the North Sea. So director Richard Curtis cut 20 minutes from the flick, renamed it Pirate Radio and is now hoping North American audiences take the bait like hungry sharks.

Known best for penning such romantic comedies as Notting Hill and Love Actually (which he also directed), Curtis here turns to the very loosely-based true story about a ship stocked with DJs who spin outlawed rock 'n' roll all day and all of the night in the mid-60s.

Led by a boisterous American expatriate (Philip Seymour Hoffman), the ragtag group decides to play on even after the British government calls a moratorium on the unregulated transmissions.

However, as fascinating as that true tidbit of recent English history may be, Curtis instead delivers an homage to the 1960s mainly focusing on the music and frivolity of the era — tossing in an over-the-top stuffed-suit (Kenneth Branagh) and lots of free-love antics that will tonally make you seasick.

In that sense, Pirate Radio doesn't broadcast much in the way of a cohesive story but instead delivers a series of random subplots, buddy moments and groovy retro tracks by the likes of The Turtles and The Kinks.

However, with its re-edited cut and an undeniably talented cast that is clearly having fun themselves, Pirate Radio stays afloat just long enough to keep from sinking altogether.

Kunstler's story told

DOC They grew up in a home like no other — where bullets arrived in the mail and where their father went to the basement to open packages he feared could contain explosives.

That was life for the daughters of the late civil rights lawyer William Kunstler, whose clients ranged from the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. to Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman and John Gotti. Now, his daughters are telling their stories — and bringing him back to life on film for a new generation.

The documentary, William Kunstler: Disturbing The Universe, by Emily and Sarah Kunstler, is being released at theatres in New York today and Los Angeles this month.

The sisters made the 85-minute film to tell their father's story through the eyes of young girls, who sometimes could not understand his representation of society's most despised.

Nerd rock with an attitude

Weezer frontman Rivers Cuomo's quirky creativity wins over fans

BRYAN BORZYKOWSKI
for Metro Canada

If there's one thing you can't criticize Weezer for, it's playing too long. Most of the band's albums clock in around 33 minutes, including the group's latest Ratitude. But that's not short enough for frontman Rivers Cuomo.

"We're going to put out albums more frequently, and they might be shorter," he says on the phone from his L.A. studio. "I don't feel like I need 12 song epics anymore — I want my music in smaller doses."

Ratitude, the group's seventh record, isn't the band's most succinct disc — that title goes to 2001's 28 minute Green Album — but it is Cuomo's quickest record since then. With 10 songs it moves speedily along, which is just how the Harvard-educated singer-songwriter wants it.

"I'm going by how I listen to music and what I want as a music fan," he explains. "After six songs you say this was rely satisfying. Eight songs is cool, but that's enough. Then there's another song. At that point I have to switch."

Of course, if you're going to write an eight or 10 song record, all the tunes have to be good. And that could be a challenge. Ratitude isn't the band's greatest record — and Pinkerton are still better than his more recent work. Its juvenile lyrics don't do the disc many favours — the song Girl Got Hot is a silly track about a homely girl who turned hot — while musically some of the songs lack the complexity of earlier work.

Weezer's

If he scrapped two or three of the mediocre tunes, maybe Cuomo would have a strong, short disc. (If You're Wondering If I Want You To) I Want You To, the album's title track, is an infectious power pop tune that fits nicely alongside Hash Pipe or any of his stronger songs from the last eight years. Despite some of the less memorable tracks, Cuomo still has that quirky creativity that won over fans in the first place.

That's evident on the song Can't Stop Partying, Lil Wayne. It's a bizarre cially Wayne's sluggish rap, but thanks to thought-provoking songs here. "Working with Lil Wayne wasn't weird to me," he says. "The moment I heard him do it, I wrote down every word, memorized it and would rap it to myself."

Maybe Weezer won't just shorten records in the future — he could change direction all together. A hip-hop album perhaps? "I'd never do a rap album," he says. "I love rap, but I love melody too."

"Music fans and consumers need to watch what's being proposed."

Howard Knopf pointed out the ridiculousness of this claim back in September. Divide $150 million by 97,000 and the average payout per rights holder has been about $130 PER YEAR. Subtract the $22 million that went to lawyers, auditors, administration and lobbyists and the actual number is even lower.

If your eyes didn't glaze over at the phrase "copyright reform," read on. Three Canadian songwriters, Amy Sky, Marc Jordan and Marie Denise Pelletier, made a plea. Here's the gist: Canadian performers need to be fairly compensated when their work is copied and used. Things go off the rails when they start quoting bumpf from Savethelevy.ca, a website exhorting that Canadians be taxed in new and innovative ways for the privilege of copying music for personal use.

This is not new. In 1997, a levy was applied to recordable media (blank cassettes, CD-Rs and Mini-Disks) to compensate artists for this private copying. This is why a spindle of blank CDs costs exponentially more in Canada than in the U.S. Since then, more than $150 million has been collected and distributed to over 97,000 songwriters, composers, recording artists and other rights holders — and here's the best part — "most of whom would not be able to continue their careers without this revenue."

And why stop there? What about hard drives and USB keys? Don't use them for storing music? Too bad.

Don't get me wrong. Our copyright laws desperately need to change with the times if we're going to protect artists and intellectual property. But music fans and consumers need to watch what's being proposed, too.

James Taylor

Taylor and King touring 40 years later

PEOPLE James Taylor and Carole King are going back to their roots.

The two singer-songwriters say they will go on a long concert tour together next year, recalling the first time they played at the Troubadour Club in Los Angeles in 1970.

That gig was a milestone, marking King's debut as a solo artist. Taylor had just recorded Carolina In My Mind and Something in the Way She Moves. Both continued on to award-winning careers.

They reunited two years ago with the band they used in 1970 for a celebration of the club's 50th anniversary. They enjoyed it so much they wanted to take it on the road.

The tour begins in Australia in March.

The world of the paranoid

Sci-fi remake imagines society under constant surveillance

AMBER RAY
Metro World News

It's disarming to meet a knight in Chuck Taylors.

It's also highly appropriate for Sir Ian McKellen to dress so casual-cool for our interview as he promotes The Prisoner, a brilliant new miniseries that manipulates appearance and perception while deftly delving into themes of paranoia in a seemingly civilized, but truly authoritarian, society.

"Individual's place in society, surveillance, the knowledge the authorities have on you simply because you carry a cellphone..." — McKellen rattles off the heady topics The Prisoner examines.

"They know everything that's in that phone, everything you've said, every message you've sent. You cannot delete a message — did you know that?"

McKellen is the man behind the conspiracies, not the one pondering them, in The Prisoner. He plays Two, the leader of a mysterious modern-day utopian society where everyone is known by a number, not a name.

It's called the Village, and when New Yorker Michael (Jim Caviezel) wakes up in the strange, resort-like town, disoriented and demanding a way out, he is told there is no out. There is no New York. And, by the way, he is Number Six.

After portraying Jesus in the brutal, bloody Passion of the Christ, Jim Caviezel knows what it takes to bring a grueling role to life. And no matter how much playing the tortured

"The tears came
'cause I felt like we didn't just get out of this project.
We did great."

Actor Jim Caviezel

hero in The Prisoner drained him, Caviezel refused to give any less than what it took to make the miniseries a work of art.

"If The Prisoner had just been a random thing, I would have taken the scripts, learned all my material, showed up for work and said, 'OK, there it is,'" the actor says. "But we had to make it better."

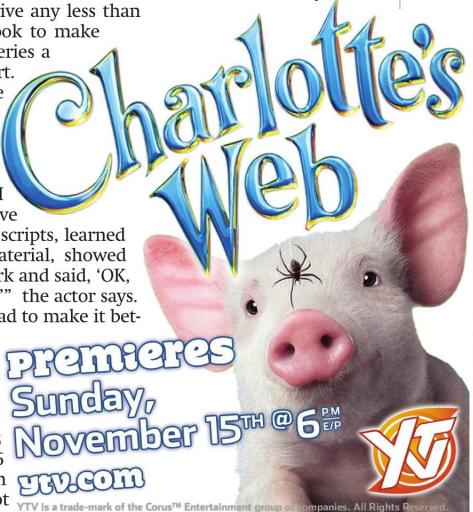

That kind of dedication — he worked 92 of the 96 days on the shoot — took a toll on the actor.

"When it was done, the last day, I remember I threw on a Christmas song by the Beach Boys — 'I'm dreaming of a white Christmas' — and I'm sitting there, listening to Brian Wilson sing, and I just ... argh!" He yells abruptly in a show of relief.

"The tears came 'cause I felt like we didn't just get out of this project. We did great ... We were great."

A remake of a cult British series from the 1960s, The Prisoner is a mental chess match between McKellen and Caviezel. It's a terrifying meditation on freedom versus conformity

In The Prisoner, Ian McKellen plays Two, leader of a mysterious civilization in which everyone is known only by a number.

Original Prisoner series became a Cold War classic

CULT CLASSIC When AMC starts airing what it calls its "reinterpretation" of classic '60s British TV series The Prisoner on Sunday, it will rekindle a debate that's been raging in the geek universe for more than 40 years: Was the original Prisoner the most creative, provocative, deep, multi-layered and fascinating TV show of all time?

Or was it simply a product of its flower-power decade — a confused, hallucinogenic nightmare that in the end made no sense at all?

One thing is for sure: the new six-part miniseries is a chance for a new generation of viewers to discover the original show, which first aired in 1967. AMC has made all 17 original and state control. "Six and Two are closer than they think," explains McKellen. "Still, they don't stop arguing and battling and fighting it out — thank God not physically, because I'd lose every single one of those."

episodes available online at amctv.com.

The cult classic was a tale of Cold War espionage starring Patrick McGoohan as an intelligence agent who is rendered unconscious by a gas attack and wakes up in an Orwellian world.

Another show bites the dust
The latest addition to the TV graveyard is Dollhouse. According to several insiders, Fox will not be ordering additional episodes of the low-rated sci-fi drama starring Eliza Dushku. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Skate series finalists enjoying the glide

SHOWDOWN Coaches and finalists on CBC-TV's Battle of the Blades say the successful show, which concludes Sunday and Monday, has been a long, draining experience with plenty of ups, downs and surprises.

Claude Lemieux, Stéphane Richer and Craig Simpson are the remaining men in the competition, which pairs former NHLers with female figure skaters.

Coach Paul Martini, a former world champion, says he would never have guessed, at the outset, that the men would be doing what they're doing now, including full overhead lifts with their partners.

Another coach, Olympic pairs gold medallist David Pelletier, says it was clear from the start that all eight men took the competition and their training very seriously.

Pelletier says no one wanted to get eliminated — or iced, as they say on the show — and the rivalries have grown intense.

Pelletier's Olympic partner and wife, Jamie Salé, is teamed up with Simpson, a former Edmonton Oiler, and says she's been amazed by his perseverance, even after bad falls early on.

"I think I've come a long way," Simpson said Thursday.

"(Salé) is the same great skater she's always been, but fortunately, some of it has rubbed off on me."

Trailer Park Boys take a pleasant trip in new project for Showcase ADDICTIVE TV The Trailer Park Boys are going to get high again.

Mike Smith, Robb Wells and J.P. Tremblay of Trailer Park Boys will play multiple characters in a new Showcase series called The Drunk and On Drugs Happy Funtime Hour.

The series will centre on the cast of a fictional children's show, including Smith, Wells and Tremblay, who accidentally ingest an addictive hallucinogen mixed by a character played by Rush guitarist Alex Lifeson.

As the series unfolds, the characters will contend with the bizarre cast of hallucinating children's show characters, a dysfunctional crime family that runs the town, and a dangerous cult.

Showcase has ordered six episodes to air in 2010.

"The series is definitely a departure from our previous work, but ... Drunk and On Drugs still has a huge dose of our trademark humour," Wells said in a press release.

TV's screaming dance diva is stepping out

Dancer, choreographer and So You Think You Can Dance judge Mary Murphy is known for originating the "hot tamale train."

IAN JOHNSTON
for Metro Canada

The resident queen of scream on So You Think You Can Dance has some no-nonsense advice for those planning to audition for her TV show in Toronto this weekend.

"If you love the show and think you can bust a move, then by all means, show up. You never know till you try," says Mary Murphy.

who splits her time between a guest stint on SYTYCD Canada and a full-time gig as a judge on the original American version.

"But it's a long day," she warns. "So stay hydrated. Bring lots of healthy snacks. And stay warm. I've seen too many dancers who waited in line all day, got up in front of us and had a terrible cramp."

Murphy, a veteran dancer and choreographer, has lately seen her fame in-

"I was surprised at the number of hip hop and b-boys in Canada."

because I won't put them on the hot tamale train," she says. "I want to keep it special. I don't say it easily. You have to earn it."

Murphy sees little difference between dancers who audition in Canada and those in the U.S.

"The talent is still there. But I was surprised at the number of hip hop and b-boys in Canada. And there does seem to be a lot of great ballroom dancers from Montreal, which also surprised me," she says.

"The great thing about the show is that you find these gems, these great dancers, who come from nowhere. That's thrilling."

Disney's newest princess creating buzz

Holly Price Alford is over the moon about Disney's first black princess. Her eight-year-old daughter is, too, but not because the princess is black.

"She understands that this is a princess who is African-American," said Alford, who is black and lives in Meadowbrook, Va. "But do I think it's a big deal to her? No."

Princess Tiana debuts in The Princess and the Frog in wider release Dec. 11, and grown-ups have certainly been buzzing. But for many little black girls growing up with Malia and Sasha Obama in the White House, the historic nature of Tiana's debut in Disney's mostly white princess lineup doesn't quite seem to register.

Girls of all races have already caught princess fever, and young black girls embrace the white stars of Hannah Montana, the Jonas Brothers and High School Musical without worrying about race.

Still, some of their moms are making sure their daughters understand the significance of the princess with her brown doe eyes, fuller lips and elegant tiara.

But little girls are simply excited about the story, said Alford.

Metro's 7th Heaven: Metro taps what's hot right now

1 Under the Dome: Stephen King

BOOK The master of horror weaves political allegory into his latest offering — a whopping 1,072-page rewrite of a novel King attempted to pen twice in the '70s and '80s. This time, the thrills are set in Chester's Mill, Maine, which suddenly finds itself surrounded by an invisible but impermeable barrier.

2 Pirate Radio

FILM When the British government stole rock 'n' roll from '60s kids by banning songs on radio, renegade DJs on floating vessels snatched it right back by airing the music on contraband stations. Richard Curtis' new comedy tells the story of these offshore AM firebrands. On board: Phillip Seymour Hoffman (remember his turn as rock journalist Lester Bangs in Almost Famous?), Bill Nighy and a riotous soundtrack. You can't sink this.

3 Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2

GAME Any war game would be a fitting release during Remembrance Week. But it's even more apt since Modern Warfare 2 immerses gamers into a detailed, exhilarating world of combat that doesn't hide its horrors. Already a massive hit in its work of release, the title has also generated some controversy around a scene where the chief character goes undercover as a terrorist and kills civilians.

4 Star Trek

DVD There have been bigger moneymakers this summer, but none deserved more popcorn-munching than this franchise reboot. The casting was bang-on, the script was intelligent — heck, even Leonard Nimoy was back. But will it deliver on the small screen? You be the judge.

5 Them Crooked Vultures: Them Crooked Vultures

ALBUM This might just be a "fun" project for those involved but to the rock fan, they are the Supergroup of the Year. The Vultures comprise Dave Grohl (of The Foo Fighters), Josh Homme (of Queens of the Stone Age) and — hold your breath — former Led Zeppelin bassist John Paul Jones. Monster riffs and snaking grooves are headed your way.

6 The Prisoner

TV Roll over HBO. AMC is ready to take over the world of cable channels. Hot on the heels of the Mad Men season finale comes this three-part series — a re-imaging of the '60s classic. Critics can't seem to find enough praise for the drama, starring Jim Caviezel and Ian McEwan. The Prisoner airs Sunday through Tuesday at 8 p.m. EST

7 Linden MacIntyre

AUTHOR The CBC journalist won Canada's top literary prize this week for his second novel The Bishop's Man. MacIntyre, who is best known for his work with The Fifth Estate, beat out Kim Echlin, Annabel Lyon, Colin McAdam and Anne Michaels to take home the $50,000 Giller Prize.

Something awry in Springfield?

New behind-the-scenes Simpsons book

In the world of The Simpsons, politicians are sleazy crooks, teachers are dispassionate drones and police officers are comically incompetent.

During the ongoing run of more than 20 years on the air, the creators of the Simpson clan have created an empire out of collectively mocking authority and poking a finger in the eye of the establishment.

But when Toronto native John Ortved began investigating the behind-the-scenes history of the show for his book, The Simpsons: An Uncensored, Unauthorized History, the longtime fan came to realize that The Simpsons has become a tightly guarded, rigid establishment of its own.

"Simpsons producer James L. Brooks drafted a letter to everybody who had worked on The Simpsons ever — everyone who was working on the show and everyone who had worked on the show — asking them not to speak to me," Ortved told The Canadian Press in an interview at his parents' home in Toronto.

"They did make it quite hard for me."

Yet over the objections of Brooks and series creator Matt Groening, Ortved was able to gather more than 80 interviews for an expansive history of the longest-running sitcom of all time.

Groening has long been considered the creative genius behind The Simpsons, its ubiquitous titular family, the wacky denizens of Springfield who orbit them, and the pointed, rapid-fire social satire that is the show's stock in trade.

But one of the central revelations of Ortved's book is just how erroneous that assumption is.

"If there's a controversial element to the book, it's that ... these writers and producers told me that Matt Groening has either taken or received too much credit over the past 20 years," Ortved said.

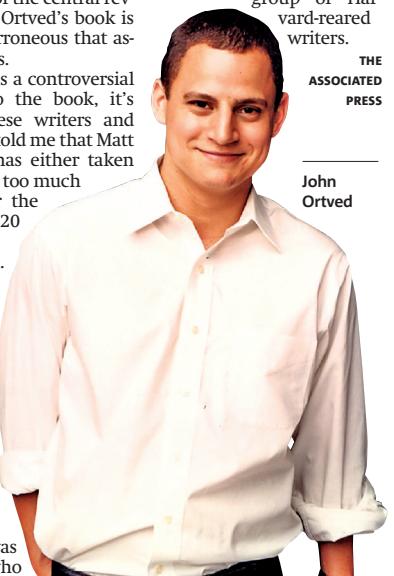

In fact, Ortved argues, the show's tremendous success happened because of a conglomerate of talented creators.

There was Brooks, who lent the show its emotional heft and without whom it never would have made it to the air. There was Gyorgyi Peluce, the colour designer who decided to make the Simpsons yellow and Marge's hair blue. And then there was Sam Simon, a grizzled, cigar-chomping TV vet who created many of the show's colourful characters, assembled the initial group of Harvard-reared writers.

Going Out

The end of the world ... again

It's the end of the world as we know it, and Hollywood feels fine.

Global warming, wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, continuing terrorist threats and the economic melt-down have people in a gloomy, even end-of-days frame of mind. Filmmakers are tapping into worries about humanity's future with apocalyptic sagas such as 2012, The Road and The Book of Eli, along with documentaries about environmental or economic doom.

End-of-the-world stories have been a cinema subgenre since the early Cold War days with such nuclear-war movies as On the Beach, Fail-Safe and Dr. Strangelove. The advent of environmentalism and overpopulation concerns resulted in another wave of films depicting bleak futures, among them Soylent Green, Silent Running and The Omega Man.

"We always need a boogeyman, we always need the end of the world," said Terry Gilliam, whose films include 1995's Twelve Monkeys, about a world where plague has wiped out most of humanity. "I think it's the problem of being in a Christian society. It's based on it. If you don't have the end of the world, you don't get heaven and eternity."

On the heels of Al Gore's global-warming alarm An Inconvenient Truth, doomsday is an especially fertile subject today, and current tales of the apocalypse take many forms:

- Plagues of vampires with Ethan Hawke's upcoming Daybreakers and zombies with the horror comedy Zombieland and George Romero's Survival of the Dead.

- Economic calamity with the documentary Collapse, a portrait of a pessimist convinced industrial civilization is poised to crumble.

- Environmental catastrophe with the part-fiction, part-fact The Age of Stupid, about a mid-21st century archivist looking back on our times from a world ravaged by global warming.

- Devastating warfare between humans and machines with the sci-fi sequel Terminator Salvation and the animated adventure 9.

"The big difference now is it's multiple things," said John Hillcoat, director of The Road, opening Nov. 25 and starring Viggo Mortensen in an adaptation of Cormac McCarthy's novel about a father and son trekking across a decimated America.

The Cold War "was all about Russia and America and the nuclear threat, but now it's on so many levels. The environment, there's still the nuclear threat in a way that's more viable with rogue terrorists, and there's kind of the economic thing," Hillcoat said. "Also a decade I think of the Bush administration is enough for anyone to seriously contemplate it on a daily basis."

Denzel Washington's The Book of Eli, opening Jan. 15, also is a post-apocalyptic road trip across America.

In theatres Friday, 2012, starring John Cusack, is the latest disaster story from director Roland Emmerich. In 2012 the Earth's crust shifting and tumbling into the oceans after solar neutrinos heat up the planet's core.

Whatever our fate, Hollywood can give audiences a cheap taste of doomsday. "In disaster movies," Cusack said, "you can get that without having to have a real disaster."

Good homecoming

KEITH CARMAN
for Metro Canada

"Hospital Music was cathartic. This album is getting it off my chest," declares solo rocker Matthew Good about the relationship between his last effort and his current offering, Vancouver.

To Good, both albums are incredibly personal, albeit on disparate levels. Where 2007's Hospital Music was created as Good came to terms with a long-standing medical condition, Vancouver, is slightly more relaxed. It relays his experiences, sentiments and aspirations for the city he has grown with over two decades.

"When you live somewhere for so long, you see everything: the good and the bad," he continues. "You can't dispel one for the other, which is why even people who claim to hate a city still have fond memories in it. You have to focus on both of those emotions, and this album does just that.

"In this city alone, I've lived everywhere from nice neighbourhoods to the poorest one in Canada. I've watched Vancouver turn from an edgy scene with a great arts and music community to [the point] where those communities have been stifled. Some people call that progress, but I call it a cultural loss."

Despite the city's "loss," Good's commentary on the current state of Vancouver proves his creativity is at an all-time high. From the straightforward flow of Last Parade through Great Whales of the Sea — a song he crafted while tinkering with authentic whale sound bites — the album's 10 tracks are a strong step forward from Good's already solid body of work.

"I have a definite affinity for grandeur, especially orchestral arrangements. I'm a massive sucker for that," he says with a smile. "The songwriting is progressive compared to the last record, depending on how you define that. You can go off the deep end and be experimental, but I focus on the emotive quality of songs. That's where I find the progressive aspect of my work. You can listen to Hospital Music and it emotes a certain feeling, and I wanted this record to emote its own unique feeling."

Jon and I don't deserve bad press: Levi

BUT NEITHER OF YOU WILL WIN DADDY OF THE YEAR Levi Johnston says he has a lot in common with Jon Gosselin.

"He's a good guy," Johnston told People. "He's kind of in the same situation I am right now. He's a good dad and he gets a lot of bad press. He's getting the same bad image as I am and it ain't true. I can relate to that."

Johnston, 19, who met Gosselin in New York on Nov. 8, even received some parenting tips from the dad of eight, which might come in handy if the Alaskan wins his suit to gain joint custody of his child with Bristol Palin.

"He was very positive and gave some good advice that I'm going to take," Johnston said. "He told me kids are number one and do anything you can for them."

Johnston says if he were granted joint custody, he'd create a healthy and normal home environment for his son, Tripp. "He'll be living a good life on both Bristol's and on my side. No problem with that," Johnston said. "We're both doing real well. He's going to be okay. I don't do all this stuff for free. I've been making money, so I can handle it and pay for all the costs of having my son. There's nothing to worry about. I've taken care of my responsibilities." One of the ways he's making money is posing nude for Playgirl. METRO NEWS SERVICES
